

I'm not robot!

We thought of what would be our the concept, it needed to be something new that haven't been seen, that would caught your eyes, that is practical and easy to understand.i think this was the hardest and longest step on the way.we designed our wedding logo and finally we came up with this solution, which is small in size and concludes all the details. we draw the design on A3 paper, and sent it to printing... We heard about a woman who wrote a list of brutally honest (but also kind of valid) reasons why certain people weren't invited to her wedding. The list was posted on Reddit, and unsurprisingly, it went viral. While the concept of broadcasting why people aren't invited to your wedding may seem harsh, we're willing to bet some women totally agree with her reasons. Let's face it: Weddings are expensive, and they're exhausting to plan. Why should someone get a spot on your invite list if they aren't really all that important to you? We came up with a few more people that you definitely do not need to invite to your wedding, in case you're looking for an excuse to trim the guest list: Your ex-boyfriend. Even if you guys are still friends, there's really no obligation to invite him. This content is imported from Giphy. You may be able to find the same content in another format, or you may be able to find more information, at their web site. Your mom's friend who "likes" all of your Facebook posts, but whom you have never actually met. She would probably Instagram the heck out of your ceremony, but you're hiring a professional photographer anyway, so leave her out. Your waxing technician. Yes, she knows you intimately and has seen everything, but she doesn't need to see you on your big day. This content is imported from Giphy. You may be able to find the same content in another format, or you may be able to find more information, at their web site. Anyone you haven't spoken to in years. We know you were so close with your sorority sisters back in college, but if you haven't stayed in touch since you graduated, there's no obligation to invite them. Plus, you don't want any memories of your keg stand days on your wedding day. Your best friend's current fling. Obviously you love your best friend, but don't feel obligated to give her a plus one unless things are serious between her and her beau. Those photos are forever, and you don't want to be wondering who that random is ten years from now. This content is imported from Giphy. You may be able to find the same content in another format, or you may be able to find more information, at their web site. Your neighbors. If you wouldn't have them over for dinner, they don't really need to be there. Stick to sending each other fruitcakes during the holiday season. Anyone you consider a "frenemy." She's the coworker or acquaintance that you get along with, even though you both not-so-secretly kind of hate each other. Yeah, you don't need to spend $150 on her head. Do you really want to second-guess every compliment she gives you on your special day? This content is imported from Giphy. You may be able to find the same content in another format, or you may be able to find more information, at their web site. Your co-worker who is also possibly in love with you. If there's absolutely any chance that he's going to make a scene—like, stand up right before you exchange vows and announce that he objects to the marriage—you probably shouldn't chance it. Anyone you think might get trashed at the wedding. You say "open bar." They hear, "one tequila, two tequila, three tequila, floor." It's hard enough to manage a ton of guests at your wedding, without having to worry about your drunk friend grinding on Grandpa. This content is imported from Giphy. You may be able to find the same content in another format, or you may be able to find more information, at their web site. All gifs courtesy of giphy.com More from Women's Health:10 Things Married Women Are SO Sick of Hearing 15 Things No One Ever Tells You About Marriage 10 Signs You're Ready for Marriage This content is created and maintained by a third party, and imported onto this page to help users provide their email addresses. You may be able to find more information about this and similar content at piano.io We understand that your Wedding Invitation is one of the most significant keepsakes of your lifetime. Our collection offers styles and DIY digital design templates to give every couple an invitation to love forever. From classic to casual, traditional to modern, add your custom details in beautiful fonts and colors. For an extra personal touch, choose an invitation that includes your uploaded photos, featured or overlaid with text. Create your own wedding monogram and add it to your invitation design to make it extra special. It's easy to design your wedding invitation cards, download the image or PDF file, and have it printed at your local print shop on specialty paper. Our print-at-home option is entirely free, too. Or go totally tech and share your wedding invitations online via email, WhatsApp or SMS, also free of charge. For a full event management service with RSVP, reminders, registry and more features, choose the 'send online' option. Once you've designed your invites, when do you send them? And what about save-the-date cards? The consensus is four to six months before your wedding for save-the-dates, but allow additional time if yours is a destination wedding. The number one etiquette tip for these is that save-the-dates only go to people you absolutely plan to invite to the wedding. List the city location to give adequate planning time for travel and lodging, even if your exact venue is still undecided. You can create a unique wedding hashtag and spread it to collect memories of your future event. Your (amazing!) invitations should arrive in mailboxes six to eight weeks before your wedding, again allowing extra if guests will need to arrange time off and air travel. Set your RSVP date three to four weeks prior to your wedding so you'll have time to follow up on missing responses before you have to give final numbers to your vendors. A great tip is to use an invisible ink UV pen to mark your response cards with numbers corresponding to your guest list. It's common to receive back several RSVP's with no name, and the number system allows you to identify the responders. The UV part keeps it all discreet and the envelope pristine. From the internet to your best friend to your nearly-in-laws, wedding tips are superabundant. Craft a gracious but noncommittal response to suggestions, and offer it with a genuine smile. In an unpressured moment, choose the ideas that fit your vision and your budget, and be thankful so many people want your special day to be wonderful! For more ideas and tips, keep reading at our blog about wedding seasons , money saving tips on a wedding & wedding invitations design guide He's popped the big question and you've said yes. The date has been set, the venue booked and the caterers scheduled. Now comes the most exciting part: inviting your friends and family to be part of your special day.Your invitation sets the tone for the whole event. Are you planning a rustic barnyard extravaganza? Add a wooden texture to your rustic invitation. Will you be having a destination wedding in a tropical paradise? Use a palm tree invite to get your guests excited. No matter your theme, let your guests know what to expect from the start.To help you create the perfect wedding invitation, we've created a wedding invitation template that will ensure you create a custom wedding invitation that's just right for you. We also have a list of everything you should consider when writing your invite, so that you don't miss a single detail.Jump quickly to:What to Include in Your Wedding InvitationWedding Invitation Templates What to Include in Your Wedding Invitation1.'s important to include all the necessary information your guest's need to know on your wedding invite. By writing in all the details, you'll avoid the hundreds of texts and calls from confused guests. We have a list of eight items that should be considered when writing your wedding invitation.1. Your NamesThis one is pretty obvious. Whose wedding is it? Make sure this text is the largest so that your guest's know right away the wedding they were invited to. It's also up to you to decide if you want to include your middle and last name on the invite or keep it simple with just your first names.2. Location and AddressLet your guests know where they should show up. Not only should you include the name of the venue, but include the address to ensure they arrive at the correct place. If the venue has many different buildings, specify which one.3. Date and TimeLet your guest's know what day the wedding will be and what time they should arrive at the venue. Make sure to add padding in the timeline to account for that cousin who is always late to everything.4. RSVPAlthough all your friends and family will want to join you on your special day, scheduling conflicts will come up. Make sure you have enough seats and food for everyone by asking them to respond. If you have an online RSVP link, include that in the invite.5. Meal OptionsThe wedding menu has already been finalized so let your guests know what their options are. Have them pick their meal ahead of time to make the catering run more smoothly.6. Gift RegistryLet your guests know where you've registered. Make it easy on your friends and family by putting all the information they may need in one place.7. Cute Quote or PhraseAdd a unique touch to the front of your invitation with a wedding quote or phrase. Some templates already have this, while others have space for you to add one in.8. Plus One's and KidsYou have already decided if you're going to have a big or small wedding. Depending on your intended size, make sure to let your guest know if they can bring a plus one or their children. Wedding Invitation TemplatesNow that you've figured out what you want to include in your wedding invitation, filling in your wedding invitation template will be a breeze. Just choose a design, font style and enter your personal details. Click anywhere on the template to start creating yours. Custom wedding invitations are easy to create and a fun way to tell your friends and family all they need to know about the big day. Once you create yours, upload your design and print! Don't forget to check when to send your wedding invites so they arrive with plenty of time to RSVP.